Esperance, par le dehors de l'Isle de S. Laurens, pour Goa ou pour Cochin," beneath which, in the middle of the page, is a blank space evidently intended for a plate (Plan of Goa) p. 19 is numbered and pp. 44, 45 incorrectly paged 48, 41. These variations occur probably thus—in some copies the extended edition has been made up from the first edition by reprinting p. 9 to continue the text, which in the first edition ends with the words "auec toutes les precautions requises". In the 60 page edition the Royal Privilege has been suppressed. In the first edition, line 1 of p. 9 ends "Nor-," line 11, "& demy" and the last line "auec toutes les precautions requises". There is a short marginal note attached to the 11th paragraph. In the second edition, line 1 of p. 9 ends "Nordoüeste," line 11, "il varie" and the last line, "lors que". There is no marginal note attached to the 11th paragraph, but one of four lines is attached to the new text at the bottom of the page. The two pages containing the Royal Privilege are cancelled.

 Third edition of this romance, and the second of the two published by Verard without a date. The earliest edition of Verard is that which his address is given as "sus le pont nostre dame" which is never found at a later date than 1499. In the later edition the types are rather smaller, and the woodcut at the beginning of the second volume differs from that of the earlier edition. Verard did not live at the address "deuant la rue neufue nostre dame" before September 1503 so that some time later than that must be the date of this edition.

 The privilege is granted by Francois Ier, to whom also it is dedicated. It is stated in the privilege speaking of Regnault Chauldière, "nous a fait dire et remonstrer que depuis nagueres il a fait translater et escripre a ses depens en language moderne francois ung liure appelle lhistoire du roy Charlemagne compose par larcheuesque Turpin qui estoit escrit en mauluais langage antique non intelligible". In the epistle dedicatory after lauding Charlesmagne and his love of letters, the author adds: "Ces choses ainsi par nous succinctement recueillies sont plus amplement commemmorees et descriptes par l'archeuesque turpin en lhistoire quil a faicte en latin laquelle iay uoulu traduyre en nostre vulgaire francois tant a cause du passe temps de vous sire que de tous les nobles seigneurs gentilz hommes qui ont affection de congnoistre les nobles faictz et haultes entreprises du roy charles le grand . . . loriginal et exemplaire auquel je me suis reduit estoit si fort vieil et assaire qua piene ou le pouuoit lire et en elicer et extraire bon sens et congru." It is evident from these quotations that this new version of the Chronicle of Turpin made for Francois Ier. could not be by Robert Gaguin, who died in 1501 and who is said to have published a translation of this Chronicle at Paris, without date. The 1527 edition is not simply a translation of the old work, but has received such additions as to constitute it a romance of chivalry.

 Dibdin ascribes this book to Thomas Ferrandus who printed at Brescia in 1473 and possibly he may be correct in his assertion. He is wrong however in stating the number of lines to be 35; these are 36 on every page that I have counted. He also questions the completeness of the Tables but a glance at them comparing them with the chapter headings convinces one that no more is required.

 Only three or four copies are known of this work. M. Cordier in a long note states that, besides the Thonnelier copy examined by him, he has found traces of copies having been in the possession of Fourmont, Neumann and De Guignes. I am not aware whether the above described example is any of these. To judge from the indications of condition given by M. Cordier I do not think it possible to have been either Thonnelier's, Fourmont's or De Guignes, all of which have ms. notes or some peculiarity of binding. It may however have formerly belonged to Neumann who in a note to the Preface of his Catechism of the Shamans, 1831, p. xii., wrote: "Only three copies are known of this great literary curiosity; one is in Rome, one in Paris, and one is now in my possession." I think the copy referred to as being in Rome is that used by Fourmont who in his Grammatica duplex, p. xxvii., states that he had it from Père Eustache, who had taken it to that city. The copy said to be in Paris may be either the Thonnelier or the De Guignes example. For an interesting account of the unscrupulous manner in which this work was appropriated by P. Montigny, P. Horace de Castorano and Etienne Fourmont see an article by J. Saint Martin in the Journal Asiatique, t. i. 1822, pp. 32 et seq. Its extreme rarity even in Fourmont's day when in 1742 he published his grammar, made it comparatively safe for him to reproduce the same divisions, the same examples and even the same errors with scrupulous exactitude, at the same time informing his readers in his introduction that he had not received the Grammar of P. Varo until after his own was printed.

This copy, Sunderland v. 13042.
Brunet v. 1268, Graesse VI. ii. 331, Panzer IV. 5.

 This very rare edition has been attributed to the presses of John of Cologne and Wendelin of Spire, but a careful comparison of the types inclines me to believe that the last named was the printer. In the copy in the Spencer Library there is an additional leaf, accounted for by the last two pages of the Georgics being printed on one side only. In that copy there is the same blank page in the Æneid as described above.

Brunet v. 1269, Graesse VI. ii. 332, Panzer III. 91.

 This book was probably printed either at Vicenza or at St. Orso near to Vicenza. It has been wrongly ascribed to Basle (the birthplace of the printer) and to Venice from the mention of the reigning Doge in the colophon.

Blades II. 221, Herbert I. 67, Proctor 9679.
 The type used in this book is that classed as No. 6 by M. Blades, and is that which was first introduced in the Fayts of Armes in 1489. The translation is not made from Virgil's great epic poem, but from (it is supposed) the Livre des Eneides which was written and printed at Lyons in 1483 by Maistre Guillaume Le Roy. It is a romance in prose of which the wanderings and feats of Æneas form the subject. This work met with rough usage at the hands of the Scottish poet and divine Gawaine Douglas, Bishop of Dunkeld, in his translation of the "13 bukes of Eneados" 4°., London (Copeland) 1553, in the preface to which he says "It has nathing ado therevith, God wate nor na mare like than the Deuil and Sanct Auctin: Haue he na thank tharfore, bot lois his pyne; So shamefully the storie did peruerte." About 18 copies are known, more than one half of the number being in public libraries, and of these 18, only 9 are perfect copies.
